Scams Happening Right Now (and How to Avoid Them)

Scammers are constantly evolving their tactics, often posing as trusted organizations to trick people into sharing personal information. Some of the most common scams right now include text messages claiming there's suspicious activity on your account, asking you to click a link or provide a verification code. Others may receive emails that look like they're from a delivery service saying a package is delayed and requesting payment or personal details. Another growing trend is phone calls pretending to be from your financial institution, where the caller asks for account information to "fix" an issue.

One of the best ways to protect yourself is to pause before responding. Be cautious of urgent or alarming messages, avoid clicking links from unknown sources, and never share sensitive information like passwords, account numbers, or verification codes. Remember, legitimate organizations will never pressure you to act immediately or ask for this information unexpectedly.

Staying informed is your first line of defense. If you ever receive a suspicious message or aren't sure what to do, we're here to help. Our team can review the situation with you, confirm what's legitimate, and guide you on the next steps to keep your accounts secure.
